ior class will visit

v York this year

IFER INGE
ar the senior class has the cision of trying to decide go on their senior trip.
on is somewhat limited,
by the School Board's
"the senior trip shall be
o Virginia or states Virginia."
policy was instituted four or years ago mainly for economic sons, according to Donald rmentrout, ACHS principal. The School Board's main concern was to stop the interruption of academics caused by having too many money-making activities for funding the senior trip. However, this policy can be changed, because it is not against state or federa law, as in the case of this year's trip to New York.

Jeff Miller, senior class president, feels that the exception was made because of the 1983 senior class's "great reputation of being achievers and their sticking together for fund raisers." Miller also said that he feels "the seniors will be supported by their families."

Now that the tough part of getting the trip approved is over, a great responsibility rests on the seniors. If those who go on the trip happen to "mess up" or do something that gains disapproval, the underclassmen will suffer the consequences. In this case, Armentrout feels that the School Board would discontinue any further senior trips all together or make sure that the in-state policy was followed without any exceptions. Terri Nash, a senior, stated that "this is unfair because you can not penalize a class because of another class's actions. I think that a class's actions throughout their high school years should be considered."

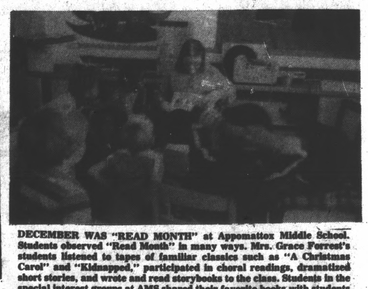
Mr. Lawson was guest speaker for the class that has been involved in a simulation game concerning law. Mr. Lawson answered students questions and explained his career as a lawyer. Mr. Lawson is shown above talking to students.



DECEMBER WAS "READ MONTH" at Appomattox Middle School. Students observed "Read Month" in many ways. Mrs. Grace Forrest's students listened to tapes of familiar classics such as "A Christmas Carol" and "Kidnapped," participated in choral readings, dramatized short stories, and wrote and read storybooks to the class. Students in the special interest groups at AMS shared their favorite books with students at the primary school on Dec. 15. Ruth Glover is shown above reading to Mrs. Scruggs' first-grade class at the primary school. Mrs. Joanne Martin's students prepared a bulletin board on reading, read stories and poems to pre-schoolers at a local nursery school and to kindergarteners and primary pupils at APS, read to senior citizens in local nursing hems, and shared stories and poems over the school intercom. Mrs. Kathy Whately's students prepared a bulletin board in the hallway in observance of "Read Month", wrote reports on stories read each week, read orally in class and enjoyed oral readings presented by their teacher.

THE TRAINABLE Mentally Retarded class of AES received a tour of the school's cafeteria Thursday, January 6, 1983. The students were shown the large oven in which rolls were baking and were given a demonstration of the dishwasher. Mrs. Elolse Robinson, cafeteria manager also pointed out the large utensils and pans needed to prepare daily lunches. Mrs. Robinson is shown above giving the tour; each student was later treated to a roll. Shown above from left to right area: Mrs. Dorinda Saxton, teacher and students Jen Robinson, Michael Shearin, Mitch Glover, Bo Kress, Randy Murden, and Barbara Broggin.

Bill Stone

Appomattox has a 'private eye'

Appomattox County now has its own version of Jim Rockford.

Bill Stone, an Evergreen resident, has begun a private security business. Stone Investigation Agency will deal with anything from domestic investigations to privately-contracted crimnal investigations.

Stone, a Durham, N. C. native, worked as a police officer in the city of Virginia Beach for eight years before moving to Appomatox in 1972.

"I got a taste of investigative work while working as a police officer," notes Stone. "I liked it, and I planned to get into it when I left Virginia Beach, but wound up in construction work full time when I moved here," he notes.

Becoming a private investigator is not a cheap proposition, according to Stone. The state requires that you take a course for accreditation, and the license itself costs $600. In addition, private investigators in Virginia have to be bonded, which also costs several hundred dollars.

Stone notes that his work will not be confined to this area. "I'll work all around Virginia," he notes. He says that there is always a high demand for investigators in missing persons cases, and there is a great deal of demand for investigators in domestic cases.

Another area in which there is a high demand for private investigation is industrial theft, according to Stone.

Stone notes that the private investigator's life is seldom exciting or as glamorous as portrayed on television and in the movies. "there are a lot of late hours, and a lot of tedious work," he says.

Another misconception perpetrated by the entertainment industry involves tactics such as kicking down bedroom doors and snapping photos of unfaithful spouses. "you have to be very careful not to violate any laws, such as invasion of privacy," notes Stone.

In time, Stone plans to expand his busines. "I'd like to get into security systems (burglar alarms)" he says, and I'd like to get a polygraph (lie detector) machine in the future," he notes.

Phone company adopts new logo

Continental Telephone of Virginia's parent company is adopting a new corporate symbol that will soon be appearing on customers' phone bills and bill inserts, according to William Watson, Director - Public Affairs in Mechanicsville.

Watson said that the new logo will be a stylized rendition of the word "CONTEL" in burgundy and gray. Eventually, the new logo will completely replace the current phone company's symbol, which is a large, black "C" with a smaller "t" and a picture of a telephone receiver set inside.

"Our customers can expect to see the new CONTEL symbol on their monthly phone bills starting in April and they will probably see announcements in some national magazines even before that", said Watson.

According to Watson, Continental Telecom Inc., the parent company, plans the changeover to the new symbol to be a gradual process. "It's going to be a while before people see the new logo on every piece of stationery or on all the installers' vans," he said.

Fred McGehee, Continental Telecom Inc.'s coordinator for industry relations in Atlanta, said the conversion is going to be step-by-step instead of overnight because of expense. "Our internal slogan for the conversion is 'zero expense,' " he explained. "In other words, everything that's now in stock--from letterheads to manuals--will be used up before any new material with the new symbol is used."

"There might be some initial confusion," said Watson, "when our customers see the word 'CONTEL' on their bills, but they still see the big c and little t' on our vehicles and on the sign in front of the office.

"But we're still the same company. It's just going to take some time before everything is changed over to the new look," he said.
